Station security stays on track thanks to ASSA ABLOY Security Doors

ASSA ABLOY

"This Costain Laing O'Rourke Joint Venture is a high profile project, involving many elements and suppliers. It was therefore crucial that all aspects of the development were delivered on time, to enable its continuation and successful conclusion.

"I personally visited the ASSA ABLOY Security Doors manufacturing site in Lisburn, Northern Ireland, to oversee the programme, and was delighted in its progress and final success, with all door sets delivered and installed to plan."

Clive Loosemore,
Costain Project Director

Company: Halcrow Atkins/Costain
Laing O'Rourke Joint Venture

Segment: Transportation
Property type: Underground Tube Station
Plant location: Central London
Product: ASSA ABLOY Security Doors high security steel doorsets

Challenge

Bond Street Tube station is undergoing a £300m upgrade, forming part of wider significant changes to the central London Underground service.

The prestigious contract, due to be completed in 2017, was awarded to Costain Laing O'Rourke Joint Venture, with ASSA ABLOY Security Doors' products specified by Halcrow Atkins. Seeing the incorporation of a new Crossrail station, the improvement works will help to service more than 225,000 passengers per day.

Solution

The installation of ASSA ABLOY Security Doors' specialist steel doorsets, which comprise high performance Stainless Steel, London Underground-approved ironmongery and hold a 60minute fire rating audited by Exova Warringtonfire under the Certifire Compliance scheme, helped to keep the upgrade on track, and were crucial in enabling further work to continue on the £multi-million development.

Many of the double action high-security doors were fitted with electro-magnetic hold opens, helping to ease authorised access on high traffic and fire escape routes.
